RE: Continued targeting of TMTG by ProPublica

Dear Mr. Kutner:

As you know, this law firm represents Trump Media & Technology Group Corp. (“TMTG”), and this letter is in response to your reporter, Justin Elliott’s inquiry, sent to TMTG late last night.

Obviously, Mr. Elliott is in the process of writing yet another in his series of hit pieces on TMTG, once again basing it upon unreliable sources, attempting to paint a picture of internal turmoil, and quite obviously with the intent of damaging the reputation of a start-up firm because of its association with conservatives like Devin Nunes and Donald J. Trump. He continues to harass current and former employees, business associates of TMTG, and even their family members, in his crusade to smear TMTG. These are regular people, not public figures, and simply want to be left alone.

It is telling that ProPublica has chosen to focus its attention on supposed internal disputes at a relatively small, start-up company, while almost entirely ignoring the abuses perpetrated by Big Tech firms like Google and Meta and their collusion with the U.S. government to censor Americans based on their viewpoints.

We remind you that TMTG intends to exercise its full legal rights to protect its reputation from recklessly false allegations, and in turn to protect the livelihoods of its employees who work hard in the competitive and stressful tech industry. Our previous document retention notices continue to apply.

ProPublica's continued targeting of TMTG
